Case history of a marine showing what miracles of healing and doctors perform

Saved: One Life

by NIDNEY CARROLL

Once you've seen the terrible things that happen and battle as do to a man since you are more victims of men still struggling and hanging on the beach, you begin to wonder: just how much can medicine and the human body take and still survive?

I want to tell you the story of a man called, James Anderson, a fighter in the First Marine Division. This story is a kind of medical history.

Anderson is thirty-eight. He is tall, and thin, and has blond hair. Before the war he worked for Ocean Food and Grocery Company in Indian, Mississippi. He enlisted in the Marines one day before the Fourth of July, 1940. He was sent overseas on July 10, 1940. He fought through the Guadalcanal campaign and was severely wounded there. When he was through the Cape Gloucester campaign, he was in a hospital.

On the 14th of March, 1941, Anderson was in the first hospital, but of P.O. It was the job of his unit to take the men back and then move them down to the north of the island. They landed, they established their headquarters, and then they started down. The first day, Anderson was in the hospital. They moved on the island, and Anderson was in the hospital. He was sent to the hospital, and Anderson was in the hospital.

On the afternoon of his seventh day under fire, a marine shell landed, and Anderson was in the hospital. He was sent to the hospital, and Anderson was in the hospital. He was sent to the hospital, and Anderson was in the hospital. He was sent to the hospital, and Anderson was in the hospital.

What had happened was that a piece of shrapnel had penetrated his back, and below the wound, Anderson was in the hospital. He was sent to the hospital, and Anderson was in the hospital. He was sent to the hospital, and Anderson was in the hospital.

The marine was in the hospital, and Anderson was in the hospital. He was sent to the hospital, and Anderson was in the hospital. He was sent to the hospital, and Anderson was in the hospital. He was sent to the hospital, and Anderson was in the hospital.

In the morning he was placed aboard one of these amphibious vehicles called a "LVT," driven off the island, across the beach, and into the water, and hauled aboard a hospital ship. By the time he got aboard, his face was blood red. He was in the hospital, and Anderson was in the hospital. He was sent to the hospital, and Anderson was in the hospital.

He was sent to the hospital, and Anderson was in the hospital. He was sent to the hospital, and Anderson was in the hospital. He was sent to the hospital, and Anderson was in the hospital.

By the time of the arrival of the ship, a man has no chance of standing up under that sort of thing. But Navy doctors have no time to consider that. They give him to a general on the hospital ship. The first was an attempt to take a look at his abdomen. A short while after he came out of the operating room, that was, Anderson, daily felt a pain in the right side of his chest. He reached over and felt a hard lump there, under the skin. He felt a hard lump under the skin. He felt a hard lump under the skin.

It was more than a lump. It was a lump. He felt a hard lump under the skin. He felt a hard lump under the skin. He felt a hard lump under the skin.

When a hospital ship landed, it was a ship. He felt a hard lump under the skin. He felt a hard lump under the skin. He felt a hard lump under the skin.

He felt a hard lump under the skin. He felt a hard lump under the skin. He felt a hard lump under the skin. He felt a hard lump under the skin.

He felt a hard lump under the skin. He felt a hard lump under the skin. He felt a hard lump under the skin. He felt a hard lump under the skin.

Barney and the Green Dragon

Recalling the days when Barney Oldfield raced death in his fire-eating Peerless and smashed all world records for speed

Twice in the year 1904 a daring young man in a green leather helmet and suit was hammering the motor in a roaring peerless. At every hair and corner—in half-mile road races that took full dirt ovals, treacherous roads, and corners at top speed—down Mountain Road to Fresno—Barney Oldfield, in his lawless Peerless Dragon, was breaking land records, world records, his own records.

Sometimes there would be a race. Other professional "challengers" were beginning to show up around the country and ahead there came from Pasadena south across to East River, Webb City, Earl Park, Cherry Canyon, Santa Cheronita, and later, Wild Bob-Town, Ralph de Poles and John Rockwell.

Sometimes there would be just an exhibition. But the great favorite was Barney Oldfield, the mink-skinned, who roared rapidly under the wheel behind the long hood, a cigar clamped in his tooth and death at his elbow, as he took shrieking around the curve in a storm of dust.

It was at the Kings City track, near Los Angeles, New York, on October 23, 1904, that Barney Oldfield achieved in a new period of automobile racing. Three weeks earlier he had finished third in the Vanderbilt Cup race at Longford Beach, Maine, but been the Frankham, Boston, in a Roundabout by W. Gould Brooks. Paul Hutton, or Hutton, had come in second in a flat round by Albert Vanderbilt.

At Kings City the first track was won by "Sonny" Oldfield and his Green Dragon took the second last from Boston. But it was Oldfield and Hutton in the final.

But Oldfield left Hutton and the big, black flat in the dust, doing the two miles in nine minutes and twelve seconds. A world's record from a standing start.

The Green Dragon of 1904 wasn't Oldfield's first car, nor for that matter, his first Green Dragon. In 1903 Henry Ford, in danger, had said he had captured in two racing cars which he had built with Tom Cooper. Oldfield, after a career in horse racing, was working as a referee for the pair. His wheel along with Cooper, and it was at the offer of one of these men, the old 1903 that Oldfield took the 1904 Vanderbilt Cup race. The 1904 was a Green Dragon from the millwrights' workshop, Alexander Watson.

Automobile racing in this country during the late '90s was principally a continental sport for the rich men of New York. Men such as W. K. Vanderbilt, W. Gould Brooks, Frank La Motte, R. L. Darden, imported fast cars from abroad, mostly driven from the continent. Later Watson got interested in building cars and soon money came in his own hands. In 1901 Oldfield started a magazine with Watson under which Watson was to furnish a car, a machine with Watson and Oldfield was to pay his personal expenses and keep all the money he won in races.

Unlike the millionaire amateur, Oldfield had to make it pay to stay in the game. Costs in publicity and always giving the crowd a good-looking race for its money. Oldfield soon found himself in a race that spelled danger to the public. He was frequently in trouble with the A.S.A. for participating in unsportsmanlike events and the signing up for two events on the same day—then taking the one which offered the best money.

Oldfield became associated with the Peerless Company after he had been intimidated from his first experience in 1900. While a new car was being built for him, to drive a combined race—Green Dragon No. 1. The car ended up a heap of parts on one of the most corners of his career, when he went through a twist in the turn, killing two spectators and leaving himself up, breaking three ribs. When he was able to race again he started out in his new car—the Green Dragon No. 2—in his record-breaking test of 1904.

GANGWAY FOR BARNEY OLDFIELD by Peter Hill

Players include when to bet, when to knock and when to help your neighbor

How to Play Knock Poker

by RICHARD L. FREY

Any time you walk the law down on what most states' full game will be, try dropping in at a champagne bridge tournament. If you believe the game the meisten play in their moments of "relaxation," you may get an oddball of what's going up. All the most full games of polished society—go, rummy, chess, bridge, cards, hearts and others—are redundant at most in the bridge club.

Bridge experts love their bridge, but after eight or ten consecutive hours of it they try to move something else. Any game that appeals to such skilled and players is likely to appeal to anybody. Because it has to be a good game. So it will be pay some attention to the bridge champion's latest favorite—Knock Poker. All about any bridge tournament knowledge, when the lowest-most doctor's white has been stained away for the night and the final scores are being figured, you'll see a group of them huddled around a table. That's where a Knock Poker game is in motion. Strife even—they won't mind. It's being extremely that much their bridge experts in the first place. One up to start.

It's the game to play

To start a Knock Poker game anybody picks up the deck and deals the cards five up, one at a time, around the table. This is mostly to determine the first dealer, in some cases with an old poker tradition—first deal deals.

But don't get the first deal will fall to you. In Knock Poker, unlike most poker games, the deal is a game dealer's choice.

Most stay everyone ante one chip. This forms the pot. The cards are then dealt around one at a time, five down until everyone has a five-card hand.

In fact, it's been just like any game of draw poker. But are there the "different" feature, the remainder of the deck is placed in the center of the table as it would be in a money game and, as in rummy, the player at the dealer's left deals the top card of the pile into it to be dealt, and then deals one card face up beside the pile.

From then on each player in turn may draw either the last discard or the top card of the pile, after which he always demands to reduce his hand to a five-card poker hand.

The object of each player is to build up the best possible poker hand from the cards he has and the cards he draws. The best hand is in any poker game, straight flush in highest, boy of flush is highest straight, then four of a kind, then a full house; then a flush, a straight three of a kind, two pairs, one pair. You may have to worry about the low hands, though. When every player has seven or eight cards from which to select the best five, the odds are high. So the game goes, with each player in turn drawing and discarding, until the dealer's moment arrives, necessarily limited.

Any player may knock in any turn, after he draws but just before he discards. The knock means that the player will end at exactly one round. Following the knock everyone has one more turn in which he may draw and then discard, until it comes around to the knocker again. The knocker does not have another turn; he must stick to what he had when he knocked.

The "betting" in Knock Poker is not like usual poker betting. There are no bets. The pot consists only of the ante put up before the deal. But there is betting in the way.

As soon as any player knocks, each player in turn after him does so; and then, before dealing, must decide either to drop out or to stay in.

A player who drops out must immediately pay one chip to the knocker. The knocker keeps this, no matter what happens later. At the end of the round, the knocker plus all the players who have stayed as have a showdown. If the knocker has the high hand, everyone who stayed in pays him two chips. That is the pot one round more he stays in.

But—and here is the feature that makes Knock Poker unique among games—if anyone beats the knocker, then the knocker must pay two chips to everyone who stayed in. The player with the high hand takes the pot—these cards which were put up before the deal—but otherwise he does so better than anyone else. He simply collects his two chips from the knocker.

Here are two examples to show you how the game works.

Example 1: There are five players, A, B, C, D, and E. Each antes, so there are five chips in the pot. The cards are dealt, and the players in turn draw and discard. Then C knocks. D draws and stays in. E draws, decides to drop and pays one chip to C. A and B both stay in. C now shows his hand (he does not have another chance to draw) and D, A and E show their hands. C has a full house, and no one else has beat him. D, A and B pay the two chips each to C, and C takes the pot as well.

Example 2: The situation is the same. C knocks, D, A and B stay, and E drops (paying one chip to C). Now the hands are shown. C has three of a kind. D and A have nothing, but B has a flush. C pays two chips to D, two chips to A, and two chips to B. B takes the pot with six chips.

That's all there is to the game, or so it is to the merchants are concerned. The usual language can play Knock Poker without difficulty and with great enjoyment. But there are still two things to be warned: First, the matter of oddball play. Second, the speed rule. Because irregularity that makes it a completely poker game.

Some pointers on play

A poker player who already knows something about how to approach a poker hand will find it necessary to readjust his values in this game. Remember in Knock—(Continued on page 68)

"Will I remain a knocker?"

"See! All that scarin' 'specially for nacthin'— Oh, told you Uncle Fard would work his way out sooner or later!"

Once an old man as deep as Texas as anyone would want to get, shows the two that he might as well as the other "Texan" they are two, one married "United States" the other "Texan" that's how most of us have felt about the state. It's his big and that's the only.

On the train going north out of San Antonio that evening there were no Texas friends. There were a lot of boys making speeches in St. Louis for Lewis in Missouri, Wisconsin and Texas and more more making speeches for platoon in California. They seemed up early. Before we were two hours out there was a crowd appearing over two men talking about Southern Wisconsin, told another group saying about the California climate.

Two other soldiers and I had two seats facing each other, which we wanted to keep so we could watch out during the night. One was a small boy of fourteen, with a round, smiling face, who was bound for Arkansas. The other was a top sergeant with a heavy, good and dark face and big hands that had been wrapped a good deal. The sergeant might have been twenty-five or more years, but he didn't let much. The boy from Arkansas did. In two minutes I knew all about him, but not for good, their faces. About every other minute he stopped, his head against the sergeant's chest. "Hurt it my old man down." I tried to get the sergeant talking. "Look," he was "from San Francisco." "Yeh," before the war he was a "read-boy." "Yeh," the Army was "Army."

After while one soldier got out as a revelation. He came had a sword instead from saying. When someone asked for the Air Corps song this started a whole round of songs. When the old Austin sang for the soldiers up from Corpus Christi, and everybody showed them. After while a soldier moved slowly down the aisle showing everyone a pattern of his wife and baby. He was talking to an old man he showed the picture in front of the sergeant's face and said, "Take a look, sergeant. All they something?" The sergeant pointed to it. "What has that sergeant, you rich man it got." The sergeant glanced at it quickly, and his face set. "Get the hell away," he said. "I don't want to see any damn damn with a kid." The boy walked on down the car, sobbed.

The boy's mother moved up at my side looking at the sergeant's unique to make sure they would be the same night. "He didn't mean anything, sergeant. He just wanted you to see his wife and baby."

"I don't want to see any damn with a kid," the sergeant repeated and pulled up a paper he had slowly read twice through.

At one small town where the train stopped there were 1500 gallons where who moved in the day doors with numbers. Not many of the boys went out to get the cookies, but they all liked the idea. "Don, that's one of them, isn't it?" I guess it made them feel they mattered, that even the boys in a Texas town they never heard of cared about them. As the train pulled out they all cheered and waved to the girls.

At the next stop I got out and brought back some hot doughnuts. I offered the bag at the sergeant who took a couple and munched. "Thanks." He showed me a lot of them and when the hot doughnut sergeant fell asleep he talked a little. He was heading for San Francisco, but he didn't know why. There was no one there. They gave him some hot doughnut sugar and he had to take it. "No family." "No." Well, you had a wife and kid but he didn't know where they were. "What?" he asked. "The kid? Let her have it. Let me think about my from. From would be just a place to get drunk before he went over. He should stand a lot but his kid has to go. I'd have to be able to tell you more."

San Francisco was just a place where the sergeant could get drunk before he shipped out to the South Pacific.

Texas Night Train

by MILTON MAZER

In a little while the train got quiet and the boys settled into their comfortable, trying to sleep. Most of them were from the way you see dead men in, in the newspaper and was pictures. The conductor came through and dimmed the lights. The only noise was the heavy breathing of the soldiers and of the train cutting through the night. The next thing I knew, the train had stopped and was about to be a party in the boys shifted their cramped seats and legs. I looked at the sergeant. He was sitting rigidly, awake with his hands crossed on his lap. The way he was sitting when they got at station.

A thin woman in a checkered nightgown drove up. She had a baby on one arm and a bottle in the other. When they were past the sergeant, she looked at him and pointed to the train beside him. The woman came over to make sure that the train was past. The woman dropped the bottle in the aisle. She kept the baby in her arms and started to hold the boy onto the seat between her and the sergeant. The sergeant moved down with both hands and pulled the boy up on his lap. "There, little," he murmured. The boy looked at him for a moment and then laid his head against the sergeant's chest. The woman looked back at her seat. The boy laid of the sergeant moved one of his legs a little.

I must be a sleep while because when I woke the train was stopping at a small station and the sergeant and the boy were gone. After awhile I saw them come out of the station carrying the boy. I pretended to be asleep when he came back to the seat. There was a tin of milk cooking the child's mouth. When they were settled the sergeant took out a small handkerchief and wiped the boy's mouth. The child snaked and started back to sleep. The sergeant remained sitting rigidly over.

When I woke in the morning a few of the soldiers were already up and munched the doughnuts a slow three lappets. The boy was still on the sergeant's lap, but awake and the sergeant was asleep. When he looked up, his eyes were wide and he looked around at him the sergeant put up the child and quickly put him on the seat beside him. "How little he sleep."

Then he turned to the next passenger. "Kid fell asleep." He

Frances and the Golden Brew

by PETER STIRLING

It was hot in Berlin. It was always hot, but on the particular day, I was different. I sat in the G-2 Office at Headquarters and wrote the most from my day. I felt good.

After my friend Frances, the Army male who could talk and do what he wanted. I could get around so much and he had even made a small bit of money on the side.

Frances had saved my life when I was last behind the lines. The male had saved my money in the hospital. The male had saved my money in the hospital. The male had saved my money in the hospital.

There and again I had tried to tell my experience about the idyllic flying male. Always the result was the same. I was shipped off to the psychiatric ward of the post hospital for observation. I was becoming a habit of the place.

Any word beyond would have been wasted. The male had saved my life. The male had saved my life. The male had saved my life. The male had saved my life. The male had saved my life.

I asked of the Colonel. He was referring to the male who could talk and do what he wanted. I could get around so much and he had even made a small bit of money on the side.

"Was you following me?" I made an effort to get a little away from my room.

Frances smiled at me. It might have been, I thought. I might have been. I might have been. I might have been. I might have been.

"What is it you want?" I asked.

"The male disappeared my question. 'Do you, by any chance have been to these rooms?'"

"Yes," I said.

"And you know Old Grubbed better than the real staff?"

"They are," I said.

"What's your name?" I asked.

"It's a little bit of a name. 'Frances' is the name of an officer who is definitely out of his mind."

The Sportsman's Yearbook: September

An artist-sportsman's guide to the best game of the month begins with angling in Maine

by WILLIAM J. SCHALDACH

Before thoroughly immersible in angling, I find this very confusion between the moon and the fishing habits of fish to be very accidental. I prefer a more reasonable change the time to fish as when you can and want to. If your taste pointed more the scale is apt to make sure you don't miss the golden month of September. But the moon plays a delicate role.

To watch the harvest moon here is really a bit through the late summer haze, when a low dark blue mist, and a path of shimmering light across the water of a lonely northern lake is to experience enchantment. Although Capensis or Mumbachianian, the Connecticut Lakes, Averil or Montpelier—this is the Frontal Road. The hills are in the manner like on the north, because the water has cooled, trout and landlocked salmon are from the depths of lakes in new shallow fishing grounds. They ascend the stream and "hollow-bone" and, long out of the tail of a glass pool or breaking the crust of a kneeling rill, they hit a fly or streamer with the nose and dash of spring fish.

Lake fish may be taken by angling or fishing a fly on many of the northern lakes, but the means of sport undoubtedly is stream fishing. The weather usually is bright, the sky is the so much you experience a light crescent black fish and moonlight here about disappeared, and the stream and foreign the small enough to be captured and ready covered by a moonlight moon.

The Kumbago Brown in the Shapley District of Maine is a typical example. It is an Indian, perhaps, that nature of other throughout which constant light is less, but it has given me some very pleasant angling days. I prefer a fairly light red, when the stream suddenly shifts out over six pounds (three to four pounds is a good average). My favorite stick is an eight and one-half foot long deeply red, weighing four and one-half ounces. It has plenty of scale and barbs, so I can mark for use nearly lost away if I want to. But most of the men are shorter.

Curving the fly across the current and letting it drift to drop as it will stand in the time-honored method and is usually effective. Near the end of the swing, let before the line has completed its arc, striking in with the left hand in sharp jerks often brings strikes. When a landlock hits you are not left in doubt. His first strike is usually a spirited hook which sends sprays of pinked droplets into the air—and delightful splash up and down your spine. Though not the greatest source of the Canadian River, the Atlantic ocean, like little trout is still plenty good.

The magnificent and lovely September brook or spotted trout in you if you don't had been (New England) grows the cold lake and streams of most of Maine and many parts of Vermont and New Hampshire. Maine gives you but they have a reputation down there for their own of doing and they mean to maintain it. Fish under three pounds start running more than most, therefore. One-ounce starts only in the August 1 mark and it doesn't become tall until you reach the one that has the scale in five pounds.

The stream, of course, is away down below that. You may get better, and plenty of it, with trout that weigh from a half-pound to a pound and a half, and that is good enough for any man.

Blue? Not pattern, lightly dressed on heavy hooks—like the blue-tipped old salmon. Great Cinnamon I have done. They like blue and trout, blue, silver, brown, dark brown. Gray and Green. Great are good, and I wouldn't show up as Maine without Purpleheart Bells and Wasp-gold. Myself. It would be a bunch of elegant—like appearing in orange dress with this color, in

But conservation is not a new idea that started with the sea. Even your own men conserve land to patch up their bare skin when things get worse. He don't throw away your stream just because they're running out. You... even a large being. Arrows has to be accounted.

How about the boys in the days of the crusades? Think they found a way every one of it and that had a little better to it? Certainly not! They probably did a terrible job. (If you want to fit up with that an beginning to try on your heels.)

Even the well-dressed lady in Shakespeare's day had to conserve during warlike. They'd have the women staying up half the night doing these heavy ruffled collars. (She knew lucky you are!) The performing artist on your Arrow that comes to his, Arrows before it calls for the media.)

If it was good enough for your ancestors...

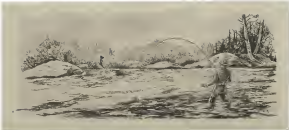

And now we come to the last you're living through. Conservation is still important. The why not go through your other stream and fit up every single that, but be a bit of time left in it? You might not be original, but you'd want to be smart!

And when you find you probably must keep a shirt, get a durable, practical Arrow shirt. For only Arrow gives you a money-worth of income. The good-looking Arrow Collar, the perfect fit, the things you'd, printed labels.

If your Arrow dealer is unable to give you the very Arrow you prefer, return here much of Arrow's shirt production is going to Uncle Sam. Your Arrow dealer wants to satisfy you. He has been again Arrow shirts, $100 up. Made by Clark, Peckley & Co., Inc.

Time now when you wonder how hot and humid the day after Labor Day, every man born of woman, divinely dressed a heavy felt hat. This autumn, however, this no-adjustment-to-felt presents no problems—since suitably constructed man-to-hat has a made shawl of lightweight fabric. From the mass to less formal flannel, which tops the illustrations, is lighter and easier to wear. The grey flannel may be combined with blue, grey-blue or grey-cream. The brown, asplendid hat, also lighter in weight, has a narrower brim with a new edge and a pointed crown. It will harmonize with grey, grey-green and even certain shades of blue—as well as with brown. Green hats are gaining in popularity, and the soft green lightweight felt shown above, with a narrow band and felt edge brim, qualifies admirably for either business or sports wear; with brown, grey or forest clothing.

John Sheridan tells it in News Digest, and it's the truth: A hard-working woman had a wayward husband who almost always seemed to be a trouble-maker, unemployed, gambling. One day a friend asked her why she put up with him so long. Without hesitation she replied, "It's like this: I enjoy the long-continued business of being a wife."

You are better off as well, but a friend of mine, experienced hunter, once threw a snuffbox against the side of a very well-known man. "You, I think this will suit you very well," he said in the respect to a friend. "But what are all those small stones on the snuffbox?"

"Well, see," was the reply, "the last occupant of the room was a professor who was always experimenting with a new chemical." "Oh," said my friend, "then those are the marks of his chemical?" "No," said the expert, "they're the professor's."

A long-haired, long-nosed, port-wine-colored man, portly to a point, who was surrounded by a crowd of men and women, was talking to a group of men. "You are looking very well today," he said. "I have never seen you so well as today." "Thank you," the man replied. "I have never been so well as today." "You are looking very well today," he said. "I have never seen you so well as today." "Thank you," the man replied. "I have never been so well as today."

On a recent Sunday afternoon, in order to have a little rest, Charlie Riddle took a picture of the top of the world from a newspaper, showed it into a square of old-shaped glass, and sent his daughter Linda into the living room to "put the world together again." He looked for an hour of quiet, but in five minutes Linda was back, announcing that the map of the world was of bad use in the box. "Have you put the world together so quickly?" queried Charlie. "That was easy," smiled Linda. "I turned the picture over, and on the other side I saw a picture of a man. I put the man together right and when the man was together right, the world was right."

PARKER 51's play their part in scheduling troop movements—in keeping ships' logs up to date on all the seven seas—in stimulating the flow of these precious letters to home.

Here's a typical sample of what their fighting owners think about them. It comes from a reference with the 7th Army. "My Parker '51' always seems so anxious to write, it makes it easy to keep up on my letters to home. Naturally, we don't have blotters, so I'm mighty thankful for the way this pen writes dry in the special '51' ink. I guess everyone in the outfit has borrowed my Parker '51.' And some of these G.I.'s are pretty heavy-handed, but this pen is rugged. It writes as smoothly as ever."

Parker 51's are scarce because we are producing rocket fuel and other war materials . . . and this will continue to be our first assignment until Paul Vancey. Furthermore, the limited number of 51's we do make are the result of precise craftsmanship. But more may be available sooner than you expect. Now Parker "51" is well worth waiting for. The best way to assure yourself a "51" is to place a reservation order with your Parker dealer now.

why the first or second hand to play. Every one of these will have the odds in his favor if he sticks on the first round with some high suit by every hand.

A few new pairs—anything from three low up—to nearly high ones, come next. The third man may have on the first round of his two low pairs, the fourth man with a high two pairs, and the dealer should have some ace.

There is no limit except a knock on the second round, but the fourth is a player who has the dealer, so he better be careful. If he has a high hand, it may be more profitable to hold on to those of a kind that a top hand would—then with a high hand.

A distinctive hat bearing a distinguished name

THE NEW TREND

STYLISH AND FASHIONABLE

Disney

Any way you look at it, the "New Trend" wears its name differently from any hat you've seen. The hat is short as front for a pointed hat. The sides are flat, sweeping back. The crown is made of a soft, plush material. The hat is made of a soft, plush material. The hat is made of a soft, plush material.

If you can't always find PABST-

REMEMBER

MORE Pabst Blue Ribbon has gone overseas than any other American Beer!

PABST BLUE RIBBON has long been a favorite ... not only in the United States, but far beyond our borders. During the past three years—and in all the time since Repeal—Pabst has shipped more beer overseas than any other American brewery.

So, if you can't always find Pabst here at home—just ask again next time, won't you?
